"TELEPHONE DIARY" SHOWS PHONE CALLS SAVE CATONSVILLE FAMILY $20.14 IN TWO WEEKS

We recently asked Mrs. Alvin Zumbrun if she would keep track of her family's telephone calls for two weeks-estimating the time, traveling and money, if any, each call saved.

Mrs. Zumbrun's completed "diary" revealed that their phone calls had saved 110 miles of driving around town, 17 hours of valuable time and $20.14.

"We are both surprised and pleased by the results of our diary," says Mrs. Zumbrun. "We do feel, though, that the true value of the telephone cannot be realized fully in terms of dollars and cents. Some of our calls gave peace of mind that just can't be measured...we would never want to be without our phone!"

What would a telephone diary show in your home? Chances are you'd find, too, that your phone gives you back far more than its low monthly cost.

The War for the Union 1861-65 in Pictures

No. 105 As winter descended along the fighting lines in the border states, Union commanders were faced with consequences of lack of realization in Washington that this was not going to be a short war.

Assumptions that the rebellion would be broken up and the forces demobilized in a matter of months had promoted inadequate provisions. The men were expected to "live off the country" or cook themselves rations doled out in bulk: about 22 ounces of bread or flour and 11/4 pounds of fresh or salt meat a day, plus beans or hominy, coffee, sugar-when the supply lines were working. A soldier who lost mess gear issued him-knife, fork, tin plate (no spoon was provided by the Army before 1863)—had to buy it or write home.

Nearly two years were to pass before Congress, under pressure of soldier voters and their families, required improvements in commissary services. The Army assigned cooks for camps and developed such welcome innovations as "boiler wagons," which could be used for cooking potatoes in nets, making soup, or supplying hot water for washing. Cooking ranges were made mobile. The war eventually became the first in which general attention was given to providing the fighting men with hot food they didn't have to cook themselves.

[†] Winter quarters improvised by Union soldiers, with cook shack in center. Note barrel chimneys. Right: Army boiler wagon developed in the war.

Probing The Foundations

When any tax-exempt, income-producing group of institutions triples its membership in less than a decade and enjoys a similar increase in income siphoned off the tax base of the economy, it deserves a searching look to insure it is not producing a damaging burden upon taxpaying individuals and businesses.

This is the motive behind an investigation to begin shortly by a special House committee on small business. Its target will be tax-exempt foundations, and its inquiry will be primarily concerned with the effect of such institutions on the small tax-paying business.

Foundations are commonly supported in part or entirely by large corporations. They provide an opportunity for capital accumulation through stock purchases not possible by an organization subject to income tax laws. Many instances exist of a foundation holding controlling stock interest in the company which founded it.

There is nothing necessarily bad about foundations as such. Much of the money donated to charity and for the preservation and acquisition of art treasures comes from these sources. The philanthropic world owes much to the multi-million-dollar foundation.

These advantages may not be worth the cost, however, if the tax-producing segments of the economy are providing a disproportionate share of the money. This is the determination the special House committee must make.

The Glenn Team

Now that we know that the Glenn Team consisted of at least 18,000 persons, scattered over the face of the Earth, we have some better understanding of the problems involved in astronautics. The entire machine is a complex of systems, involving enormous mathematical and physical knowledge and those who attend the various instruments must be trained to nervelessness so that their personal reactions do not produce instantaneous disaster.

We know that the astronaut is not a robot who sits in a cage controlled by buttons. We have heard him at work; we have listened to evidences of intelligent direction of his enterprise and we can witness that he has engaged in intelligent, articulate reporting of his work for permanent record. This was not a "push button" effort but rather the mobilization of intelligence and expertness in many fields and the disciplining of the human will to a selfless goal.

In a word, it is the mind and the spirit of man that still prevails and these enormous accomplishments in new scientific fields, dramatic as they are, come down to the simplicity of an organization chart and the selection of the personnel capable of split-second thinking and decisions that are based not on prejudice but on accurate scientific data.

But there is something more that has to be addedthat is the spirit to serve, the subordination of oneself to the judgement of a team, the acceptance of the expert, a willingness to overcome private prejudices for the general good.

In our social system, the reward for labor is money compensation. When that reward is unsatisfactory, the laborer strikes. The astronaut receives a piddling monetary reward for his services and knows when he enters upon such a career that it is not money he is looking for; that his wife will not wear mink coats and that his children had better look about them for scholar-

This is going to make a tremendous change in the outlook of a generation whose hero got $245 for the ride. The monetary compensation just does not count and those who stood at the various machines were sweating it out for the success of a rewardless enterprise. A few of their names and occupations come to us but not one will get a rich movie or TV contract or will sell his life story. This was a selfless contribution to the country and to human knowledge.

And that is important to emphasize because a tremendous social change is occurring in this land which cannot be ignored. While we are still complaining in many quarters that the government is impoverishing us by its brutal taxes, which is true, the young people of the country are mostly going in for public service, in the Army, Navy, Air Force, space, missiles, public health, nursing and a hundred other public occupations.

For years, we objected to the employment of an enormous personnel by the government. But when we realize that the Glenn Team—one team—consisted of at least 18,000 persons, we have to adjust our thinking to the size of government employment as long as the government is engaged in these enterprises. It must mean that the number of persons to be employed by the government will increase and that they will be more expert from year to year.

The military forces will require more scientists of every type. The public has seen for itself how the scientists worked on the Glenn Team. We saw a little of it but it does not require much imagination to realize how much scientific knowledge has gone into every phase of the astronautic endeavor. Ambitious boys and girls will be wanting to enter such service not for the money return that it will bring but because it opens the door for increased study and for greater experience.

In many fields, the best equipped laboratories will be government operated or attached to private enterprise companies almost exclusively engaged in government contracts.

Also, a new type of business firm that becomes important in this effort is an altogether different complex of productivity. As their names came over the air, they rang no familiar note. They are scientific firms and the men who manage them are scientists rather than salesmen. Their principal customer is the government. It takes them a year or two to produce a single item and then they are not sure that it will work. It's a new world.

WASHINGTON-Buried in the dusty files of the Archives Building in Washington is an amazing record regarding Harold Woodward of Chicago, Republican, nominated by the President to the Federal Power Commission.

Eisenhower appointments to the Power Commission came in for criticism by this column because they favored the oil and gas industries which they are supposed to regulate. What these commissioners decide affects the gas bills of millions of housewives, of industry, and millions of electricity users.

Kennedy also criticized Ike's appointments to the Federal Power Commission during the election campaign, and has now appointed two excellent men, Joseph Swidler and Howard Morgan, plus one Texas oilman, Lawrence O'Connor Jr.

His fourth appointee, an Illinois Public Utilities Commissioner, was involved in one of the worst federal judicial scandals in Chicago history.

The dusty records in the Archives Building show that the House Judiciary Committee voted 15 to 5 to impeach his father, U. S. District Judge Charles Woodward, for giving a long list firm in which his son was employed and from which his son directly benefited.

Woodward And The Truth

The record also shows that the new Power Commissioner did not tell the truth when testifying before the Judiciary Committee. He was asked: "You told your father about your increase in salary?"

"No," was the reply. "You did not tell him anything about that?'

"Possibly afterward, but they were long afterward. I never discuss my intimate personal affairs with my father.'

His father, however, testified just the opposite.

Asked about his son's employment, he repli-d: "I knew he was employed by that firm, first at a very modest salary, and later I knew his salary was increased, because at first he asked money from me. And later he told me his salary had been materially increased.

"During the times they were increased you had knowledge of that?" the judge was asked.

yes," was the reply. Asked by this column about practicing law on the side while serving as assistant Illinois Commerce Commissioner, Woodward admitted this was true, but said he had refused to accept any cases during that period. Whether he was telling the truth this time might be difficult to ascertain.

Revolt Against Centralized Government

Inside Washington

By Henry Cathcart

WASHINGTON - Despite the fact that the House of Representatives overwhelmingly defeated the Administration's latest reorganization plan. President Kennedy predicts that the establishment of a department of urban affairs, which he unsuccessfully advocated, is an inevitable development.

But the President, unhappily, has not analyzed the real reason for the setback. It wasn't personal. It wasn't based, as he suggests, on opposition from rural areas to giving aid to cities. It wasn't motivated by the ill-advised interjection of a racial issue in the announcement that Robert C. Weaver, a Negro, would be appointed to head the new department. The refusal of Congress to go along was due primarily to a deep-seated revolt against the concept of a centralized government which could conceivably convert the White House into the most powerful political machine this country has ever known.

For if a department of urban affairs is needed to work with municipal governments, it is just as logical to ask for the creation of two other departments - one covering all relations between the federal government and state governments, and another to embrace all relations with county governments. Likewise, it can be argued that the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare has too broad a scope, and that it should be separated into two departments, so that one can specialize in education But the basic mistake is in the concept that new departments are needed for urban affairs, just because city problems have increased. Fundamentally - if the federal government is to maintain the constitutional principle of state, city and county systems, as separated from the federal system — what is desirable is not several new departments, but one department that specializes in the disbursement of federal funds and the making of contracts with the states, counties and cities. Also, if the argument that the federal government doesn't intend to control the educational process of the states — when federal funds are furnished to them - is accepted as sincere, then all that is needed is a good business organization to see that federal funds are matched by the states, and that the money is spent for the purposes set forth in the law.

While Robert Weaver might be a good man for a cabinet post some day, it would have been much better if the President had turned to the business or financial world and had selected another Robert McNamara to head up the very department of urban affairs which he espoused. For it is not a knowledge of city politics that is so much needed as a familiarity with large business and financial Billions of dollars of the taxpayers' money are involved in all these plans for new departments. Thus, the billions that are spent by the federal government in cooperation with the states for highways are in the hands of the Bureau of Public Roads inside the U. S. Department of Commerce. It could logically be argued that a U.S. department of relations with the states would more properly supervise the work done by the Bureau of Public Roads and other agencies of the federal government that deal with the states.

areas" through the Area Redevelopment Administration, which is in the U.S. Department of Commerce. This department today delegates some of the activities of the Area Redevelopment Administration to at least five other departments or agencies of the federal government.

The fallacy in the approach heretofore to the problems of administrative reform and reorganization is that broad subjects -agriculture, labor and commerce - have been confused with simple tasks which are designed to make sure that federal funds are spent for the objectives stipulated in the appropriation laws passed by Congress.

The federal government is growing as population grows. And while the fundamental structure of the government here can be improved and modernized, the basic principles laid down in the constitution are still valid namely, that self-rule must be maintained, as well as a reliance on hte states and cities and counties to exercise full responsibility for their own systems of gov-

What is needed in government today is decentralization instead of more centralization. The states and cities are not all equal in financial capacity, and some federal aid becomes essential. The doctrine, however, that the federal government shall extract from taxpayers in New York State, for example, money to pay for the project of the state of Illinois, which has the resources to finance its own needs, cannot be persuasively defended. The President the other day in his press conference said that 80 per cent of the American people now live in cities, and offered this as a justification for supervision of urban afairs by a department of the federal government. But this might readily lead to an abandonment of self-rule and a concentration of political power in the executive branch of the federal government - a formula that could make the White House in the future a bigger source of political power and boss rule than a dozen Tammany Halls combined.

Brasilia

By John Crosby

Brasilia, a city that was carved into the bleached jungle plateau at a cost of roughly one billion dollars that the Brazilians could ill afford, looks from the air unfinished and ill-mannered. Slashes of red earth look like angry scars in the cool green jungle. The Oscar Niemeyer ultra-modern buildings sit astride the landscape awkwardly. Man and nature are not going to be at ease with one twenty, fifty, maybe a hundred years. Brasilia is not quite two years old and it's still got diaper marks-shanties, red mud (or red dust), little in the way of grass, trees, or flowers.

"Wherever you stand in Brasilia, the city seems to be on the horizon." Hal Lavine of Newsweek warned me. Lavine had spent three days in the new city, in the rain, loathing the place. But I arrived in sparkling sunshine under a blue sky filled with fleecy clouds and that changed the mood entirely. The greatest thing about Brasilia is the one thing that Oscar Neimeyer and Lucio Costa, who planned it, had little to do with-the climate. Brasilia is 3,000 feet high and its dry air and fresh breezes and moderate temperatures are going to be its greatest asset. When they get it finished.

It's a stiff drive in from the airport. But then everything in Brasilia is a stiff drive. They had an immense amount of space and, by God, they used it. Buildings are hundreds of yards from their neighbors and, even if you wanted to walk somewhere, there are no sidewalks. A terrible mistake. "What do lovers do in the evening?" a Brazilian woman, like myself a visitor, said to me. "Where do they stroll?" Already people are getting killed on the highways trudging to the bus station because there are no side-

"Brasilia, the only city in the world without crossroads," trumpets a brochure. It's all cloverleafs and underpasses. Originally meant as safety measures. Still, people get killed.

'The cloverleafs are numbered but they all look alike and if you miss your cloverleaf after a couple of drinks, you have to go through the most elaborate backtrackings to get back where you started," a guy told me.

I arrived at the United States Information Service, the only free library in Brasilia, its walls adorned with pictures of John F. Kennedy, Edward R. Murrow, and Abraham Lincoln. "How did Lincoln get into such distinguished company?" I asked. "He's a Republican?

"Well, it's his birthday," somebody explained.

The USIS library is a little shop in a street of shops, all identical and all, I think, too small. It's a wide street with much red mud and it looks quite a lot like a frontier town in a Western. A onehorse shay swished by. That's not at all typical," someone commented. "This is an automobile Across the street was "La Femme Chic," which sells women's clothes, a Hi-Fi store, a furniture store, an optician, a men's clothing store, a grocery store, and a pizzeria.

"It's very pleasant living," said an American who had lived in Brasilia three months, "Very easy access to people on every level. Where it's tough meeting people in Rio or Paris, here you just walk in. It's a small town. And it's geeting better every day. Planting more grass. Getting more

Actually, the Americans, accustomed to frequent moves to foreign climes, have dug into Brasilia much better than the Brazilian legislators, who are passionately fond of funloving Rio with its beaches and nightlife. The legislators, when they come at all, fly up Monday and back Friday. Their wives want no part of Brasilia and remain resolutely in Rio where papa and mama and cousins and uncles and aunts re-

"We had the same trouble starting Washington," an American said, "No one wanted to leave Philadelphia. They complained about the dust and everyone screamed about the distances between buildings just like here. Come on, I'll show you around."

We drove past acres of superblocks - each containing identical six-story buildings containing thirty-six three-bedroom apartments. They're all glass on one side and all fretwork in the back so you can hang the wash out of "The people are constantly crossing up the city planners,' my guide told me. "None of these streets have names - just numbers. But the people call this one the street of the little churchbecause of that little church up at the head there. Neimeyer planned this as the service entrance, strictly for the trucks to make deliveries. The people were supposed to enter the stores from that side. But the people like this street. So they've changed the stores around. The front is the back and the back is the front." I have an idea the people will modify Brasilia a lot more drastically before they are finished with it, putting the stamp of their individuality, their cussedness, and their humanity on the marble. Right now it's a monument more than a city. "You can't even call it a ghost town," wrote an English newspaperman, "because to be a ghost town you must once have lived and Brasilia hasn't done that yet." But it will. It

Associated Press Sports Writer BALTIMORE (AP) - Lamar Hunt contended Monday that the National Football League did not announce expansion plans in 1959 until after he founded the Ameri-

Post 36-34 Victory In SS League Game

The American Division eked out a 36-34 decision over the National Division in the annual All-Star game of the Central YMCA Sunday School Basketball League last night on the Allegany Community College court.

Trailing for three periods by scores of 10-4, 20-11 and 33-21, the Nationals outscored the older players 13 to 3 in the final period and fell two points short of knotting the count at the finish.

Gary Leasure, of First Baptist was the game's high scorer accounting for 16 of the Nationals 34 tallies. David Bruce, of Emmanuel Episcopal, headed the Americans with 11 markers. In the preliminary, game, the league coaches defeated the referees by the score of 40-36. South High's Rebels found their Box scores:
